

Absolutely not! An airplane is a noisy environment to begin with! When I am onboard, I want to have some semblance of privacy -- for work, for reading, for sleeping. I don't want someone conducting a negotiation in the seat next to me nor do I want someone killing time telling their buddy where they are and when they are landing. It's shocking to me how many people turn on their cell phones and begin dialing out the minute they arrive at the terminal gate. We have lost all sense of manners and propriety ... please raise the standard of behavior. It's not about the rights of cell phone users (I have one also) -- IT'S ABOUT THE RIGHTS OF THOSE WHO DON'T USE THEM AS AN EXTENSION OF THEIR RIGHT ARM. Please protect those of us who don't live and die by the cell phone (and seniors and younger children)!!! Thank you.
